WASHINGTON

by Bascom N. Timmons

Changes in White House — President Eisenhower privately admits frequent changes in the White House staff upset his organization. While his original cabinet has had but two changes, his top personal staff has had a high turnover, at least 10 new faces. Some of those leaving have blamed Sherman Adams, chief administrative assistant, who gives all the orders.

Ike has tried to draft Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, his one time Army chief of staff, who was director of the Central Intelligence Agency and ambassador to Moscow under President Truman, as White House consultant, but Smith is reluctant. He and Adams don't work together well.
